Two hundred years ago Michael Faraday demonstrated his invention of the world's first electric motor in the London theatre of the Royal Institution. We are inviting you to share in this heritage and future by making a donation which will be acknowledged in a named seat in this world-famous theatre – one for every year since Faraday's world changing discovery.

Naming a seat is a unique way to celebrate your love of science and to support the charitable work of the Royal Institution. It's also an opportunity to honour or remember someone special, or a wonderful way to inspire the future generation by dedicating the seat to a young person.

We have 200 seats available and for a donation of between £300 and £5,000 you can name a seat for 5 years.

Become part of the Ri's history and future by naming a seat.

I'm a UK taxpayer and I understand that if the Gift Aid claimed on this donation is more than the tax I pay in the current tax year (on my income and/or capital gains), it's my responsibility to pay the difference.

Please add Gift Aid to my donation

In recognition of your donation, a plaque engraved with your name will be placed on the back of your chosen seat(s). You will also receive a personalised thank you from us, a photo of the plaque and an invitation to view your plaque in situ. Your donation will be used to support the Ri's charitable work and help ensure that Faraday's legacy will be one that continues to inspire and educate.

Please note that seats will be allocated by the Ri. Naming a seat is a mark of your support for the Ri, and regrettably we are not able to guarantee being able to sit in this seat should you attend an event in the theatre.
